Broadway came to Boston yesterday for some kickin' master classes with members of the cast of "A Chorus Line."

Seventy students from Boston Arts Academy participated in the classes - one for dancers and the other for actors - after having recently been invited to see the show at the Opera House.

"We are delighted to have this partnership with Broadway Across America," said Susan Werbe, special projects coordinator at Boston Arts Academy.

"To have this follow-up really deepens this experience for them," Werbe said.

"A Chorus Line" runs through Oct. 5 at the Opera House.
